

The 26th Annual Duke-UNC Graduate Student
Classics Colloquium Presents:

INSIDE

OUTSIDE:

APPROACHES TO THE FOREIGNER IN ANCIENT GREECE AND ROME

April 11, 2015 10:00 AM
Duke University, East Duke 209

Keynote Speaker:
Eric Adler
University of Maryland
Did the Greeks and Romans Invent Racism?
5:00 PM

Session I: The Romans in Greece

The Temple of Roma and Augustus – Monumental Negotiations of Identity on the Athenian Acropolis
Kate Rogers, The University of Oklahoma

Roman Involvement in the Greek Festivals of the Roman Imperial Period
Mali Skotheim, Princeton University

Session II: The Levant

Political Agency of the Herodian Women
R. Christopher Miller,
Columbia University

Jewish and Non-Jewish Synagogues: The Meaning of Synagogue in Context
Dan Schindler, Luke Drake, and Bradley Erickson,
UNC Chapel Hill

Session III: Ambiguous Identities

Telemonian Teucer the Trojan? A Case of Nationalistic Bias in the Iliad
Brian McPhee, UNC Chapel Hill

Identity and Identification: A Critical Reassessment of Attis and his Peculiar Garment
Dillon Gisch, Stanford University

Session IV: Egypt

Redefining the Two Lands: Egypt, Greece, and Ogygian Thebes
Justin S. Miller,
Texas Tech University

Secret of the Nile: Herodotus' Rhetoric of Secrecy and Revelation in his Depiction of the Egyptians
Cassandra Donnelly, Brandeis University

This event is sponsored by the Classics Departments of Duke University and of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and is funded in part by the UNC-CH GPSF and Duke University GPSC.